

Department of Psychology

This year, the Psychology Department celebrated the graduation of the Class of '13 with two events - a graduation lunch and a gathering just before the Commencement Ceremony itself. In the spirit of keeping things informal, this year, we held our lunch event in the department itself. For the pre-ceremony gathering, most of the psychology faculty went down to the UCC to meet up with the graduating students and their parents. This proved to be an extremely lively affair and was a good opportunity for the students to catch up and take a few memento photos with their favourite professors, and also for the faculty to find out what their students have been up to since completing their final exams. Tons of photos were taken and, in fact, many of the faculty very sportingly came in their academic gowns (even though they weren't involved in the ceremony). All in all, the events went well and it was really nice for us faculty members to see that our students were doing well.

Congratulations, Class of '13! And all the best for the future!
