

American Involvement in Vietnam

- Ho Chi Minh declares Vietnamese independence from France soon after end of WWII--in Sept. of 1945. War with France ensues.
- U.S., fearing the spread of communism during the Cold War period, supports French. By 1953, carries 40% of the cost of the war.
- 1954: French defeat at Dien Bien Phu. Geneva Accords temporarily divide Vietnam in half at the 17th Parallel. Elections to be held in two years.

American Involvement, cont.

- U.S. installs staunchly Catholic, anti-Communist Ngo Dinh Diem as President in South
- Diem becomes increasingly oppressive and brutal to Buddhist majority
- Late 1950's: development of Viet Cong in the South
- Strong Buddhist protests against Diem in early 1960's; Kennedy-approved coup in October of 1963

The American War in Vietnam

- Kennedy had been sending American “advisors”
- Johnson sends first American combat troops to Vietnam in 1965
- By mid-1967, U.S. has almost half a million ground troops in Vietnam
- 1968: Tet Offensive; My Lai Massacre
- 1969: Nixon approves secret bombings of Cambodia
- 1970: Shootings at Kent State
- 1973: Draft ends; last American troops leave Vietnam
- 1975: Fall of Saigon

Vietnam War Literature

War stories aren't always about war, per se. They aren't about bombs and bullets and military maneuvers. They aren't about tactics, they aren't about foxholes and canteens. A war story, like any good story, is finally about the human heart.

--Tim O'Brien

Vietnam War Literature

Outpouring of Vietnam War literature and film begins in late 1970's

Early Literary Works

- Ron Kovic's Born on the Fourth of July (1976)
- Michael Herr's Dispatches (1977)
- Philip Caputo's A Rumor of War (1977)

Early Films

- Coming Home (1978)
- The Deer Hunter (1978)
- Apocalypse Now (1979)

Early Accounts

- ⇒ Usually first-person narratives by actual witnesses
- ⇒ Anti-heroic stories-- assert moral ambiguity
- ⇒ Deflate notions of patriotism, glory

The Great War and Vietnam

- ⇒ British WWI literature shares much in common with Vietnam literature.
- ⇒ Both wars changed their country's mythic self-perceptions.
- ⇒ Both illustrate tension between romantic expectations of war and battlefield reality.

3-Part Structure

- 1) The sinister or absurd preparation for battle
- 2) The unmanning experience of battle-- characterized by disenchantment and loss of innocence
- 3) The retirement from the front lines

- ⇒ If literary romances (the poetry of Tennyson, etc.) were the sources of idealism for British soldiers in WWI, what were the sources of idealism for American soldiers going off to Vietnam?

President's Kennedy's “New Frontier”

From A Rumor of War

By Philip Caputo

“The only thing I really liked about my boyhood surroundings were the Cook and DuPage County forest preserves, a belt of virgin woodland through which flowed a muddy stream called Salt Creek. . . There was small game in the woods, sometimes a deer or two, but most of all a hint of the wild past, when moccasined feet trod the forest paths and fur trappers cruised the rivers in bark canoes. Once in a while, I found flint arrowheads in the muddy creek bank. Looking at them, I would dream of that savage, heroic time and wish I had lived then, before America became a land of salesmen and shopping centers.

From Dispatches

By Michael Herr

“Come on,” the captain said, “we’ll take you out to play Cowboys and Indians.” We walked out from Song Be in a long line, maybe a hundred men . . . It was a beautiful operation. We played all morning until someone on the point got something--a “scout,” they thought, and then they didn’t know. They couldn’t even tell for sure whether he was from a friendly tribe or not, no markings on his arrows because his quiver was empty, like his pockets and his hands. The captain thought about it during the walk back, but when we got to camp he put it in his report, “One VC killed”; good for the unit, he said, not bad for the captain either.

John Wayne Movies

“Already I saw myself charging up some distant beachhead, like John Wayne in Sands of Iwo Jima, and then coming home a suntanned warrior with medals on my chest.” (Philip Caputo, A Rumor of War)

Vietnam vs. World War Two

- ⇒ Works often emphasize the difference between Vietnam and WWII-- sometimes called “the good war”

A Different Kind of War

- Guerilla warfare.
- Jungle, mountain terrain
- Difficulty in distinguishing between enemies and civilians.

A Different Kind of War

- Widespread opposition at home to the war, especially after 1967

Body Count

- No distinct battle lines.
- Emphasis on body counts as indicators of battlefield success.

Combat Trauma

- Unusually high incidence of delayed psychiatric casualties after the war (PTSD)

Some Probable Causes of PTSD

- A soldier entered and exited war individually rather than in a military unit.
- One-year tour of duty (short-timers syndrome).
- Brief post-combat transition period for soldiers returning to U.S.

Race and Class

- First fully integrated war
- Drew disproportionately upon racial minorities and poor
- Class tensions between troops and officers
- Racial tensions among the troops

From Dispatches

By Michael Herr

“I been here mor’n eight months now,” he said. “I bet I been in mor’n twenny firefights. An’ I ain’ hardly fired back once.”

“How come?”

“Shee-it, I go firin’ back, I might kill one a th’Brothers, you dig it?”

I nodded, no Viet Cong ever called me honky, and he told me that in his company alone there were more than a dozen Black Panthers and that he was one of them. . . .”

Characteristics of Vietnam War Literature

➔ Frequently brutally graphic and shocking

Heart of Darkness

- ⇒ Often Vietnam War lit. parallels structures found in Conrad's Heart of Darkness.
- ⇒ Moral explorations of individuals, stripped of civilization's restraints, confronting evil, primal emotions, chaos, savagery, often within themselves.
- ⇒ Yet also, allure of war

From “How to Tell a True War Story”

By Tim O’Brien

“The truths are contradictory. It can be argued, for instance, that war is grotesque. But in truth war is also beauty. For all its horror, you can’t help but gape at the awful majesty of combat. You stare out at tracer rounds unwinding through the dark like brilliant red ribbons. You crouch in ambush as a cool, impassive moon rises over the nighttime paddies. You admire the fluid symmetries of troops on the move, the harmonies of sound and shape and proportion, the great sheets of metal-fire streaming down from a gunship, the illumination rounds, the white phosphorous, the purple black glow of napalm, the rocket’s red glare. It’s not pretty, exactly. It’s astonishing. It fills the eye. It commands you. You hate it, yes, but your eyes do not” (181).

From A Rumor of War

By Philip Caputo

“It was soon dark. I still could not hear anything but the wind and crackling branches, and now I could see nothing except varying shades of black. The village was a pitch-colored pool in the gray-black paddies. Beyond the inky line of the jungle bordering the stream, the Cordillera was so black that it looked like a vast hole in the sky. Even after my eyes adjusted, I could not see the slightest variation in color. It was absolutely black. It was a void, and staring at it, I felt that I was looking into the sun’s opposite, the source and center of all the darkness in the world.”

From *When Heaven and Earth
Changed Places*

By Ly Ly Hayslip

“All in all, the years with my sisters and Sau Ban were among the best of my life. Ky La then--between the French and American wars--was a childhood paradise, full of tropical birds and buffalos; dogs and chickens and pigs we called our pets; rushing rivers to swim in; and wide fields where we could run and laugh and be with our families. We had fresh rain to cool us down and a hot sun to dry us off--in short, everything little kids needed to grow up happy and strong and full of love.”

The Ordinary Foot Soldier

- ➔ Ordinary soldiers usually not blamed for atrocities depicted.

From Dispatches
By Michael Herr

“It seemed the least of the war’s contradictions that to lose your worst sense of American shame you had to leave the Dial Soapers in Saigon and a hundred headquarters who spoke goodworks and killed nobody themselves, and go out to the grungy men in the jungle who talked bloody murder and killed people all the time.”

Soldiers seeking control

(a theme linking all modern war literature)

- ⇒ In most modern war literature, soldiers pursue order and control in response to war initiation and loss of innocence.

Attempts to Escape/Control

- ⇒ Attempts to escape the war by establishing some sort of order and control in daily existence.
- ⇒ Attention to surface details of life (work, basic needs, familiar routines) keeps people from asking difficult questions.
- ⇒ Also, daydreaming, imagining.
- ⇒ Sometimes drugs and alcohol (esp. in Vietnam narratives and film).

Search for Form

- Vietnam War writers search for literary forms to adequately express their experiences
- Question underlying much literature of the later 20th century, early 21st century: How does one write about atrocity?

Can War Trauma be Communicated?

- “There is nothing intelligent to say about a massacre.”
--Kurt Vonnegut,
Slaughterhouse-Five (1969)
- Cliché--“If you weren’t there, you can’t possibly understand what it was like”

Search for Form

“It is the duty of the Vietnam War writer to incorporate the seeming illogic of the war into the structure of his work. The reader should be obliged to live like the soldier, adrift in an alien universe in which the familiar. . . landmarks [have] disappeared.”

--Critic Lloyd Lewis

- Vietnam War writers often use forms that may at first appear confusing, ambiguous or chaotic to readers
 - Often formal experimentation designed to represent the disorder and confusion experienced by soldiers in Vietnam

Critiques of Vietnam War Literature

- ⇒ “Dope and dementia” view of the war
- ⇒ Internal, U.S. war
- ⇒ Lack of Vietnamese perspective
- ⇒ Sexist, patriarchal gender roles

Tim O'Brien

- O'Brien's work as much about the process of storytelling as it is about war
 - Metafiction
 - Blurring of genres
 - Blurring of fact and fiction
 - Suspicion of historical "truth"

Narrative and Healing

“But this too is true: stories can save us.”

--Tim O'Brien (from The Things They Carried)
