MAT Graduate Named "Rookie Teacher of the Year"

Outstanding educators are found throughout Dorchester District 2's cadre of first-year teachers, and many are our graduates! Congratulations to Jackie Radabaugh, MAT Special Education '13. She was awarded "Rookie Teacher of the Year Award" by Newington Elementary School in Summerville, SC. Nominees for Rookie Teacher of the Year must meet impressive criteria; candidates must be a classroom teacher with fewer than 5 years of experience that show promise as an exceptional educator capable of meeting the needs of students as well as developing professional expertise and leadership abilities. Exceptional teachers like Jackie bring high expectations for every student, a belief in each child's potential and a commitment to work each day. Congrats Jackie! We wish you continued success!

Recap: Graduate Education Week

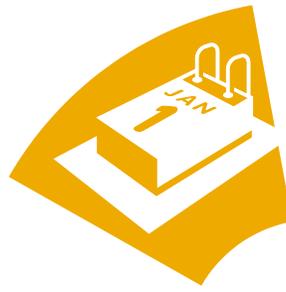

One thing that is sure about the weather in Charleston, SC is it's always in flux, and to a large degree unpredictable. Despite the ice and snow, our Graduate Education Week events were well-attended and appreciated. Thank you to all those who attended and contributed to make Graduate Education Week such a success!

You Go Grad!

Daron Calhoun is a second year student in the History program whose historical analysis of higher education is making for a bright future. As a graduate assistant at the Avery Research Center, Daron is able to work closely with a wealth of sources that fit his unique and innovative research interests. His work focuses on African American experiences in higher education and the establishment of Historically Black Colleges and Universities. In preparation for his thesis defense this spring, Daron recently presented his ongoing research on the paternalistic leadership of northern missionary organizations who came to the U.S. South to develop African American schools in the decades after Emancipation at the Avery Research Center. Daron hopes to continue his research on HBCUs and African American higher education in the future. YOU GO GRAD!
