

Not very long ago, there was a kid named James that lives in Austria. He is no hero, he is not special. Hell, he's not even welcomed in his school. All he did had was two other friends. One named Johnny, one named Reid. Johnny and Reid all grew up to be great men, but we are not talking about them today. They spent most of their childhood playing with a soccer ball that has been fixed a couple thousands times. Not because there's poor, because that soccer ball is all they need to dream about their future. Johnny dreamed to be a professional track runner. Reid wanted to be a copper. James never figured out the plan of his future, but I guess that doesn't matter, because his future already has a plan for him.

Just a few days before he turns 11, he was playing soccer with Johnny and Reid. Just when James is daydreaming about his future, Johnny kicked a soccer right into his chest so hard, that James's heart was bumped out. He had to be taken to the hospital to get a new heart. Unfortunately, the day his heart was bumped was the same day as World Cup in Brazil, so none of the doctors are really focusing on him. Instead, they pushed him in a random freezer, and work on him after the big game. But because the doctors were so focused on the big game, they pushed them into the radiology department. Obviously, his body was totally radiated. Unobviously, a genetic sequence buried deep in his DNA floated onto the surface. And that small line of genetic sequence is the sequence for the body to repair the damaged cells, which in the nerd world is invincibility. So the first thing the body did was to rebuild the missing heart. Suddenly, James woke up. He realized where he was, which obviously made him confused. One second he was daydreaming, the next he wakes up in a hospital. So like anyone else would do, he sneaked out of the hospital. And of course, it didn't take long for him to notice he can heal.

James is a huge syfy fan in his community. Probably the biggest. His paranoia and his distrust in the government made him believe that if his power is known by the government officials, he would be captured for testing and experiments. With that in mind, he decided to lay low and avoid too much attention.

And that's what he did. He tried to stay out of big activities. With the time at home alone, he developed an interest in reading. Especially chemistry and biology. So he grew up to be a diagnosis expert. But before that, he created the cure for zika.

Back in a few years, zika virus was shrinking the heads of unborn baby in a fast rate. The virus spreaded so fast the scientist can't keep up with it. The zika virus truly captured James's attention. With his ability to heal and his nerdiness, he decided to find a cure to terminate zika virus. The easy part is creating it. The hard part is distributing it. He cannot give it to the Austrian government because of his conspiracy theories. He cannot turn to the CDC because they are too far away. The only option he had was to secretly send the cure to another country. He simply sent the cure to the private email of a russian biochemist Ryazansky, and he knows that he will sent it to the russian government. And he did. Only after a few months, the problem of zika virus is solved.

But after that, he seems to vanished from planet earth. Some people said he was captured by the government to conduct tests and experiments, some say he got a new identity and migrated to America and some say he started working for CDC. But no matter what they say, he was able to do some good before he disappeared. After all, who know if he got a new identity, immigrated to New York America and currently studying in The Dwight School.