1. When it comes to question number one, here is my answer. I am not copy/pasting anything here, because I know that if I do that without attribution to the source, I risk getting kicked out of the class and earning a failing grade. I have clearly thought about what I want to say about this point and I am answering all parts of the question. If the question has multiple parts that may result in a confusing answer, I can use bullet points.
   - Here’s a main thought
     - Here are thoughts that go with it, in more detail
     - Here are more secondary thoughts, with explanation as needed

2. When it comes to question number two, here is my answer. I am not copy/pasting anything here, because I know that if I do that without attribution to the source, I risk getting kicked out of the class and earning a failing grade. I have clearly thought about what I want to say about this point and I am answering all parts of the question. If the question has multiple parts that may result in a confusing answer, I can use bullet points.

3. When it comes to question number three, here is my answer. I am not copy/pasting anything here, because I know that if I do that without attribution to the source, I risk getting kicked out of the class and earning a failing grade. I have clearly thought about what I want to say about this point and I am answering all parts of the question. If the question has multiple parts that may result in a confusing answer, I can use bullet points.