Competitiveness in a Turbulent World

Abbas J. Ali, Indiana University of Pennsylvania

ABSTRACT

This paper is designed to address national competitiveness in developing countries. We argue that as long as some developing nations are the subject of interventions, economic sanctions, or threats, there will be no opportunities for them to achieve respectable living standards and realize a competitive position in the global marketplace.

Keywords: National Competitiveness, Foreign Intervention, Development, Neocolonialization