Dominating States and Developments in Occupied Countries

Abbas J. Ali, Indiana University of Pennsylvania

ABSTRACT

The issue of colonialism and its impact on development is addressed. Three models of colonization by dominating powers are articulated. Consequences are clarified and policy issues are briefly outlined. It was concluded that dominated countries are doomed to failure and never achieve a certain level of competitiveness under foreign influence or domination.

Keywords: development, colonization, hegemonic powers, competitiveness, models of colonization.