Analysis of Being a Moral, Collegial, Cordial, and Congenial Professor and an Ethical Academic Administrator

Kamal Dean Parhizgar, Texas A&M International University

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

This article sets forth the familiar theme that campus ethics essentially consists of two interdependent facets, one is professorial academic behavior and the other is occupational academic administrative leadership. Professional academic moral citizenry duties and other institutional responsibilities concerning collegiality, cordially and congeniality are the initial characteristics of being ethical because they provide incentives to seek the truthful expected professorial behavior and a clue as to where to find it in a university. But academic institutional administrative occupational conduct must be subject to meta-ethical expected empirical testing. Nevertheless, there is a dialogue between the two episodes to be tested in order to discover the inspiration for new conjecture; campus ethics.

Keywords: Collegiality, Cordially, Congeniality, Biosophist, Technosophist, Professional, Occupational, Meta-ethical