EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

This study examines firm growth in a deregulated environment. Specifically, the study demonstrates that if firms are to experience growth in a deregulated environment, managerial resources from related industries must be acquired. These managerial resources permit firms to "creatively construct" environmental change.

Keywords: Managerial resources, Firm growth, Environmental turbulence