Brief Description of Research Project	In this project we will compare the travel behavior of people using emerging micromobility services (e.g. docked and dock-less bike, e-bike, and stand-up e-scooter shares) with the travel behavior of people who do not use micromobility services. By comparing a matched sample of users and non-users we will provide important insight into how these services influence travel behavior and public health. We will use a longitudinal design to assess the causal effects micromobility services have on the travel and health of its users.
