that works

Lynne Ellis to Host and Panelists (10:35 AM)

Is this being recorded? I won't be able to see it all live..

Michael Wohlstadter to Host and Panelists (10:36 AM)

There were a couple of interesting clusters outside of the main forage area. Where there different crops in those areas that were attractive to the bees?

Carolyn Hufford to Host and Panelists (10:36 AM)

Yes.

Fascinating! Thank you to all the presenters & those who put the OSU series together!

DONNA KELLAR to Host and Panelists (11:03 AM)

Thanks for a most excellent well articulated presentation for a very new learner.

Carol Rakoczy to Host and Panelists (11:03 AM)

Thank you! Excellent presentation

Mary Huey to Everyone (11:03 AM)

Interesting information -- thanks! Plantain is appealing to native bees as well in my experience watching my "weedy" lawn!

teresa harten to Host and Panelists (11:03 AM) thank you .. very interesting, I've been keeping track of which bees are frequenting my native garden in Cincy. I have partridge pear, goldenrod, asters, others you mention and yes honeybees are there as well as natives. i've seen fewer honey bees and more natives in recent years. I know of urban beekeepers who've given up on their hives in last several years due to a beetle infestation problem. Interesting to track some of this as an amateur. thank you!

Merry Tapp to Host and Panelists (11:03 AM)

Great information and presentation. Thanks

Beverly Koenig to Host and Panelists (11:03 AM)

Will this be saved and posted on the web? I missed that it started at 10:00

Gail Santner to Host and Panelists (11:03 AM)

Thank you to all who helped make this presentation possible! So interesting and clear.

Marilyn Gudenas to Everyone (11:04 AM)

Very informative presentation Reed. Most people simply have no idea how important honey bees are to our very existence

Karen Duncan to Host and Panelists (11:04 AM) great presentation....especially for those of us in or near central OH. Thanks!

Mary Jo Rawlins to Host and Panelists (11:04 AM)

Thank you for all the work you are doing!

Lois Rose to Everyone (11:04 AM)

How expensive is it to do the dna analysis?

Nancy Helm to Host and Panelists (11:05 AM)

Thank you.

Constance Pepin to Host and Panelists (11:05 AM)

Thank you! It would be helpful to state the plants in your presentation that are non-native and/or invasive; e.g, English Ivy, some forms of honeysuckle, Dutch White clover. Even though honeybees are fascinating, it would also be helpful to alert people that honeybees are not threatened and are an invasive species that harm native bees. Research is already proving this point.

thank you

Carol Clark to Host and Panelists (11:07 AM)

Very interesting program! Here in North Central Texas a beekeeper friend told me she was surprised by another nectar source she hadn't expected. She had honey analysis done and showed me the results. The plant is a widespread but inconspicuous vine in forested and riparian areas--Berchemia scandens (Alabama Supplejack)

Paula Goldberg to Host and Panelists (11:07 AM)

Any guess as to how honeybees might outcompete native bees for pollen and nectar in urban or agricultural

Diego Macall to Everyone (11:07 AM)
