Nonprofit Ethical Case:

Embezzlement and Murder: An Examination of MidCentral Educational Cooperative and Gear Up

Kia Harris and Nick Daher

NPA 601: NONPROFIT ETHICAL LEADERSHIP
Fall 2017

Summary

The nonprofit ethics case we examined involved Scott Westerhuis’ actions to murder his family, burn down their house and commit suicide. All of this was completed after being caught in one of South Dakota's biggest nonprofit scandals. He was the business manager for MCEC, which had access to a number of nonprofit organizations that received grants from MCEC. An audit uncovered funds that were not accounted for on various accounts, discrepancies in financial statements and concealed information. It was determined that he was embezzling money from federally funded programs and putting it into his pockets and a few staff member’s pockets, including his wife.

Dan Guericke, Director at MidCentral Educational Cooperative Organizational Responsibility

- Responsibility of MidCentral to complete regular audits
- Organizational accountability
- Engagement of the board if presented with information about employee misconduct

You cannot escape the responsibility of tomorrow by evading it today.
Abraham Lincoln
Systemic Responsibility

-Westerhuis’ intent on self-dealing- greed
-Financial accountability- poor record keeping
-Scott Westerhuis took responsibility for the finances
-The conflict of interest among board and staff members created a culture of corruption.
Stakeholders Analysis

- Native American youth prevented from receiving services to prepare them for college
- Loss of trust by community for Board of Education, Mid Central Educational Cooperative, and Gear Up
- Future organizations that may be funded by the federal grant may have to adhere to higher regulation
- Loss of trust by donors
- Families of youth affected
- Neighbors affected by the murder-suicide
Alternative Solutions

- establishment of an audit committee to complete audits regularly
- Integrity on behalf of the individuals involved
- MidCentral assessment of if the two nonprofits owned by the Westerhuis’ were eligible to receive the grant money
- review of policies and procedures related to the organization’s banking and payment systems
- requirement of effective performance and financial reporting for all of an organization’s programs and activities
Questions

1. How did the Westerhuis couple appear to serve their community? In reality, what leadership skills were they neglecting?

2. Why do you believe the other members of the nonprofit didn’t expose them for the scandal?

3. Are the other board members at fault if they claim ignorance? Are they at fault if they knew something was going on but did nothing about it?

4. Why did it take 4 years before the Attorney General began to investigate the situation? What was the effect on the youth that were supposed to be benefiting from Gear Up?

5. Was Scott Westerhuis’ moral character ever questioned?

6. What steps could Scott Westerhuis have taken to mitigate his misconduct if he was using his moral compass?
