Happy Valentine's Day!

Student Spotlight - Matt Makowski, PhD

Matt Makowski is a 2nd year Law School student. Before joining University of Chicago, he received a PhD in Molecular Biology from Rabhoud University, Nijmegen, the Netherlands.
During his postdoctorate the most fascinating aspects of his research involved consolidating data, reviewing literature, and writing academic papers, and he realized he wanted to expand the scope of this work beyond his research project. Now at the Law School, he is interested in intellectual property and technology and has found his technical training in Biology to be particularly useful when working with patent laws around complex biotechnology.

In addition to his core curriculum, Matt works at the Institute for Justice Clinic providing legal assistance to local South Side entrepreneurs. He is also doing an externship with a Chicago judge, which has given him insight into judges’ decision-making processes in the courts. Matt joined GPHAP to connect with students from the various schools and appreciates the opportunity to learn more about what others are doing in their respective programs within the health care field.
