Student Spotlight - Justin Mun

Justin Mun is a second year Crown student. Prior to pursuing his master’s degree and joining GPHAP, he worked on political campaigns across the country where he initially specialized in opposition research before pivoting to field organizing. Through his own personal experiences with government programs, such as Medicaid, Justin became more interested in welfare systems and how they impact one’s health. Applying his own experience, Justin appreciated the interdisciplinary aspect of GPHAP that created an environment for others to share their perspectives pertaining to health equity. During the summer, Justin was able to apply a health equity lens while working at the Center for Asian Health Equity. As an Erikson Fellow at the Center, Justin was tasked to create culturally competent trainings to educate community members about mental health within Chicago’s Korean, Latinx, South Asian, and Chinese communities. The Erikson Fellowship allowed Justin to garner tools that he will use to pursue... a career in hospital administration to tackle barriers to health care that communities of color experience.
