

Center for Project-Based Learning

Our workshops provide opportunities for faculty, professional staff, and leaders of higher education to learn about high quality project-based learning. Each workshop is customized to the host institution's unique context, strengths, and plans for project-based learning. Time together can range from one to two days, with 10 to 40 people typically participating. See what a 2019 evaluation of more than 600 participating educators from workshops at 30 institutions found happens as a result...

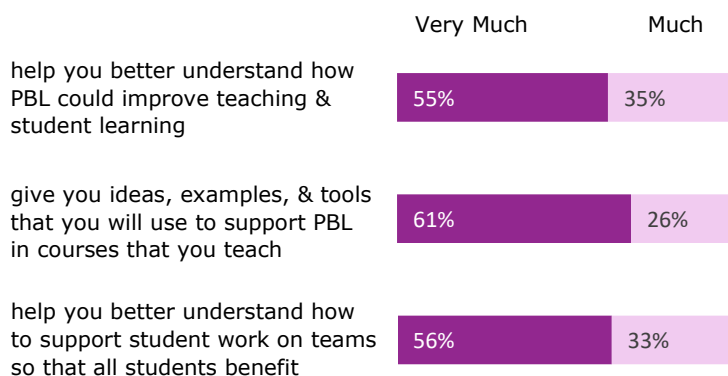

Exploring PBL

To what extent did participating in this workshop...

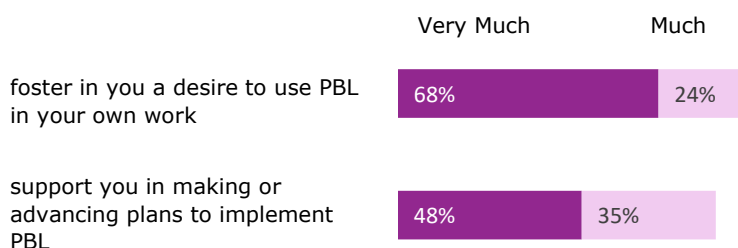

Teaching with PBL

To what extent did participating in this workshop...

Motivating Action

To what extent did participating in this workshop...

What Participants Say

"I loved the opportunity to spend an extended period of time really studying and discussing a specific teaching strategy with colleagues."
- from a community college

"[This workshop] provides a common framework for talking with colleagues."
- from a private university

"Helped me see the clear alignment of meaningful student projects with academic growth and long-term success of students beyond graduation."
- from a large research-intensive university

"I've used project-based ideas from my first year of teaching 20 years ago, but thinking about PBL as a deliberate strategy of its own helped clarify a lot of pedagogy."
- from a public teaching university

"This was time well-spent. Equal measures informative and inspirational."
- from a large research-intensive university

WPI

Want to learn more?

wp.wpi.edu/projectbasedlearning